

COMING PROSPERITY.

Each year there is a noticeable increase of rainfall. But a few years ago prospectors would start into the mountains as soon as the weather permitted and take no umbrellas. They knew that they would have no use for an umbrella until the snow began to fly. They seldom take umbrellas now, but they often feel the need of one, and if the present rate of rainfall continues to increase it will not be many years before umbrellas will be as familiar objects in the mountains as they are in any of the old fashioned rainy countries. Our dry districts will be dry districts no longer, but pleasant camping grounds amply supplied with running water and covered with grass. The desert will bloom, in fact, and the rich soil of Nevada, mellowed by rain and encouraged by moister atmosphere will make this the garden of the world. There can be no doubt that the rapidly spreading area of tilled land is a potent factor in this change of condition, and as each assists the other, with a fair start as we now have, it is but a reasonable expectation that the improvement will continue until the nearest earthly approach to perfection is reached. For many years the people have been planting trees and the effect of the foliage is beginning to be apparent. The rains during the corresponding time of last year were more abundant than in any previous year. During the year great additions were made to the area of cultivated land, and many thousands of trees were set out. This year the rain fall has greatly exceeded that of last year and a slight addition for a few years will make Nevada a land almost independent of irrigation. Certainly with the assistance of our mountain streams this will be a State divided into productive farms supporting substantial homes. An agricultural population will occupy the vast waste tracts that at present bleach under the summer sun, farmers will supply the mines with provisions, our own manufactures will furnish machinery and what was once known as the Great American Desert will be a self supporting State, supplying the world with precious metals and dependent on no other country for anything but luxuries.—Walker Lake Bulletin.

Lincoln's Biographies.

The APPEAL has received a copy of "Reminiscences of Lincoln". It is a very interesting book and over two dozen prominent men of the Nation have contributed sketches. Not a few of these biographies make out Lincoln a great man, but in a roundabout way give the reader to understand that Old Abe got most of his best ideas from the party writing the biography. Some of the passages are in this style:

"I first met Mr. Lincoln in 1858 and in a short conversation with him suggested my ideas of freeing the slaves. My remarks seemed to make a deep impression on him and I had almost forgotten the talk until in his Emancipation Proclamation he utilized my language. I always had a great respect for the great man after that."

This is indeed ice cold gall.

Dice and Matrimony.

The papers of California are making things very lively for a judge in Sacramento who tried to conceal from the public, the fact that Mrs. Porter Ashe got a divorce from her husband. The Call says that Ashe and a man named Wallace shook dice for Miss Crocker's hand, each agreeing to be bound by the way the bones fell. Wallace won and while he was on the train going to get married Porter Ashe slipped in and had a talk with Miss Crocker and the two left Wallace in the lurch. A man who won't shake dice fair isn't fit for a husband anyhow.

On A Big Scale.

In the big map of the world published in the Reno papers, Reno is represented in the center just sixteen times larger than Carson. In a map printed on the other side of the paper Powning's addition is represented as 153 times the size of Reno proper. Whenever a Reno man records a mortgage on his property he wants a document on a piece of paper at least 4 feet square.
